Logline:

Aimée, an hale eighty-year-old lady, fights for the waste separation in Stromboli.

Synopsis (450 characters):

Aimée is an elderly Frenchwoman who lives on Stromboli, an island in the Aeolian archipelago off the north-east coast of Sicily. For years she has been battling against the local administration to have correct waste disposal management on Stromboli instead of the current practice of shipping it elsewhere. But the situation on Stromboli is emblematic for the rest of Italy: garbage emergencies; entrenched environmentalists; unconcerned politicians.

TAGS:

ecology, Aimée Carmoz, Stromboli, waste, banana peels, Colapesce, branches, compost, Sicily, pollution, environment, Mediterranean

Synopsis (255 characters):

Aimée, a kind old French lady who lives on Stromboli, fights for a good waste management. The goodwill of citizens could permit to make it, but politics prefer creating the waste problem to rise funds. Her little history becomes emblematic.

Synopsis (600 characters):

Aimée is an elderly Frenchwoman who lives on Stromboli, an island in the Aeolian archipelago off the north-east coast of Sicily. For years she has been battling against the local administration to have correct waste disposal management on Stromboli instead of the current practice of shipping it elsewhere. But the situation on Stromboli is emblematic for the rest of Italy: garbage emergencies; entrenched environmentalists; unconcerned politicians. But only through efforts by people such as Aimée is it possible to bring about a change, for example, with differentiated collection or organic waste composting, thus obviating the need to send a banana peel to a distant dump out of sight and smell.
